Dear Heritage,

With many of us getting involved in politics early on due to keystone events like Marjory Stoneman Douglas's shooting and Black Lives Matter protests, the outcome of our 2020 election has a clear impact on our views of whether there are fruits to political efforts or not. Despite generational divide and moral differences, America and its citizens of all ages must come together for our future. It may be difficult to sympathize with those of differing political opinions, but real change comes from compromise. We are entering a new administration and a chance to heal our divided country. Take the steps to hear one another, and perhaps we can become united once more. This issue is dedicated to the future and wishing 2020 a hearty goodbye.

Virtual hugs and in-person elbow bumps,

Bella Ramirez

We reserve the right to edit these letters for grammar and layout restrictions and will not publish any content we deem libelous to any students, faculty or members of the community.

Table of Contents

VOTES FOR TOMORROW: The older generation primarily determined the outcome of this election despite the youth holding a record turnout of 53%. Further, with race at the forefront of the election following June's surge of Black Lives Matter Protests, minorities of all kinds (race, age, etc.) truly determined our election and our future.
